Hawthorne Chamber of Commerce and South Bay Workforce Investment Board Celebrate Award Winning Mothers for Mother’s Day

The Hawthorne Chamber of Commerce and South Bay Workforce Investment Board (SBWIB) recognize award winning mothers and grandmothers at the Hawthorne Teen Center on Thursday, May 09, 2019. Students nominated their mothers and grandmothers for being the best mothers in the world, winners were then invited to the Hawthorne Teen Center for a celebration that included words of gratitude, games, certificates and donated gift cards from the Hawthorne Chamber of Commerce.

In attendance were Patricia Donaldson, President of the Hawthorne Chamber of Commerce, Deanna Latimore and Sheryl Singh, Hawthorne Chamber of Commerce Board Members, mothers/grandmothers and teens of the teen center.

Nominated mothers were from low income background and hard working mothers. Mothers/grandmothers expressed appreciation for the opportunity to be celebrated and spend time with their children.

Activists again flood Torrance council meeting, demand officers be fired for December killing

One week after rallying outside the house of Torrance Mayor Pat Furey, activists and relatives of Christopher De’Andre Mitchell descended once again on a City Council meeting Tuesday night to demand the city fire the police officers who shot Mitchell to death.

It was the first council meeting since the city released body-cam footage of the deadly Dec. 9 confrontation between officers and Mitchell in the parking lot of a Carson Street supermarket. Mitchell’s family and Black Lives Matter activists had demanded the video be released during protests at every City Council meeting since January.

Now that the video — both edited and unedited versions — has been released to the public showing how Mitchell died, activists have been pushing their cause on social media, encouraging people to confront Torrance officials Tuesday to demand that the officers be publicly identified and fired.

For months, the City Council has placed the topic of Mitchell’s shooting on the agenda to give the activists a place to speak, but City Manager Le-Roy Jackson said Tuesday’s meeting would be “the last and closing update on Christopher Mitchell.”

‘Split-second decisions’
Jackson invited Police Chief Eve Irvine to address the crowd, and she told the activists: “The job of a police officer is difficult and dangerous. Sometimes they are forced to make split-second decisions.”

Irvine said she recognized that it was difficult to discern what was happening in the officer’s body-cam footage, but she said the city released the video to provide the public with factual information.

“I hope the folks who have questions about this tape take the time to watch the video on YouTube,” Irvine said.
Believe In Yourself

By Judith Costa

You can simplify your life by relying on yourself and trusting the Universe. There is no need to control every little detail of your life or to plan everything. Your self-confidence doesn’t come from the certainty that your decisions are totally right, just the opposite. It comes from the idea that you make decisions asking yourself what is the best for you in this moment and relying on your own guidance system. You are always supported and guided. The Universe works for you, and it is ready to respond to your desires, but you need to believe in yourself and to trust the process of life.

There are no mistakes in life. There are not right or wrong decisions. Just decisions you made in a concrete moment of time. If you stop judging yourself and your life, you will immediately start feeling more confident about yourself, and you will also enjoy your life more. There is less pressure to decide when you give yourself permission to change your life. Stop searching for security and comfort, and start going where your fears did not allow you to go before. Everything is possible if you believe it is. You will stop seeing obstacles and difficulties along the path if you observe yourself carefully and you will begin to understand the way you go through life, your patterns. Look within yourself to understand the reasons why you remain in certain situations or relationships that are not serving you anymore. Make yourself ready to embrace a new life. Forgive and let go. Look at your life with a different attitude. Choose a new perspective. Allow yourself to make a shift in consciousness. You have the power. There is always a way. Maybe not the way you have imagined, but a way. There are always choices. Train your mind to be your ally, not your enemy. Choose empowering thoughts and embrace your emotions. Listen to the voice of your intuition. Ask for help, it doesn’t make you weak. You will be helped if you allow it. The Universe has an unimaginable powers to transform your life positively, but you need to ask for what you want, and trust that it can happen to you, or that you can have it. Believe in yourself and in your power to create your own destiny.

La Mirada and Mira Costa will have to wait another day to face each other.

The CIF-Southern Section Division I quarterfinal game between the Matadors and Mustangs was scheduled to take place Friday afternoon but was delayed to Saturday due to weather in La Mirada.

First pitch for the game, which will take place at the Matadors’ home field, will be at 3:15 p.m.

La Mirada is 25-6 this season and won the Suburban League with an undefeated 9-0 mark to earn the three seed in the CIF-SSF Division 1 bracket.

Mira Costa won the Bay League with a 9-1 record and finished the year 23-6. The Mustangs beat JSerra and six-seed Sherman Oaks Notre Dame in a couple of one-win games to reach the quarterfinals.

The winner of La Mirada-Mira Costa will face the winner of Yucaipa-Cypress in the semifinals.

“This would not have happened without Dr. Manning,” Lee said. “His steady hand on the wheel kept it going forward and kept it true to its original roots.”

Going into this project, Lee said, was a political tenuous situation at best. Four out of five previous attempts to get bond funding had failed for the Torrance School District. When Measure Y was passed, Lee said it was a make-or-break moment for the district.

“None of this happens unless the citizens of Torrance believed in what we were saying and trusted us to execute,” he said. “That’s humbling everyday.”

So what’s the district’s next move? Well, more projects of course.

Measure Y was intended to fund capital improvement projects for the district — things like flooring, lighting, windows, plumbing issues — the routine refurbishing that any high-useage buildings like schools require after decades of constant use. Now that those are largely finished, with $6.5 million still remaining, Manning and the school board are setting their sights on more of the same — replacing concrete in areas where it’s damaged throughout Torrance’s high schools. They’re also looking to replace windows in Torrance Elementary School, increase the size of the parking lot at Jefferson Middle School while also resurfacing the asphalt on the playgrounds of Adams Elementary School and Hickory Elementary School.

But the district’s ongoing (and recently completed) projects go far beyond Measure Y. The district has three other bonds that have funded projects for years now.

With funding from additional bonds provided by voter-approved Measure T and U in 2014 — collectively $194 million — the school district renovated the aging Torrance High School auditorium in 2017 and finished a new auditorium at the West High School about a year ago, Manning said.

By next week, Manning said, North High School will have a new auditorium, too. And, by the end of June, the South High School will have one as well.

The software is a cloud-based database which stores visitors’ identities so that they can check-in more quickly when they return to the school at a later date. It also allows school officials to make notes on specific visitors’ files, enabling them to note if there is, for example, a restraining order against a specific parent or relative.
FPCAC – Celebrates Rickey Minor

By Earl Heath

With Help From My Friends was an old song written by John Lennon and Paul McCartney and sang by the Beatles more than fifty years ago (1967). Its lyrics were on display recently as many in the music world gathered at the CATALINA CLUB in Hollywood for the Fernando Pullum Community Arts Center Annual Gala. They honored Ricky Minor the legendary music composer, director and producer.

Minor was best known as the music director and band leader of the Tonight Show with Jay Leno from 2014 to 2016.

Born in Monroe, Louisiana and raised by a single mother Helen Bliven’s in South Los Angeles where he attended Jefferson high. Minor has been director of several major events that include: Grammy awards, The NAACP Image Awards and this year’s Super Bowl he is also part of the American Idol Band. He has served as musical director for several superstars including: Ray Charles, Christina Aguilera, Whitney Houston, Alicia Keys and Beyonce’.

Minor has been involved with students at the Pullum center for years. He has assisted them in various events including the Emmy’s Composer Awards. Minor has also made several employment opportunities available for FPCAC students.

“He has a deep caring for the kids and community,” said Founder Fernando Pullum. “He has a genuine place in his heart for the kids.”

Some “Friends” in attendance like Jackson Brown sang two of his big hits, “Running on Empty” and “Doctor My Eyes.” He was joined on stage by back-up singers Chavonne Stewart and Alethea Mills the two are former FPCAC members and Alumni of Washington Prep high in South Los Angeles.

“Fernando is my brother from another mother,” said Brown. The seven time Grammy nominee has shared his recording studio with the Jazz Band of FPCAC and allowed them to record a Jazz track.

When To Use A Blender vs. A Food Processor

In the grand pantheon of Important Kitchen Appliances, the blender and the food processor both claim prime positions. And indeed, these pieces of equipment share many similarities. They’re both motorized and designed to mix ingredients together. However, contrary to popular belief, these two appliances aren’t totally interchangeable. While certain foods can be equally well-made using either machine, blenders and food processors have structural differences to make them each uniquely suited to specific culinary tasks.

The Difference Between These Appliances

The short story: A blender is typically better for foods that will end up mostly liquid, whereas a food processor is better for foods that will end up being mostly solid.

Blenders and food processors both use blades and motors to accomplish their tasks, but the particular mechanisms of each device are crucially different. According to Bon Appetit, the motor of a blender is typically more powerful than that of a food processor, which creates the silky-smooth texture so characteristic of blended foods. However, blender blades “are not super sharp. In fact, they’re basically blunt objects.” Because of this, blenders are better for handling liquids and creating smooth textures.

A food processor, on the other hand, uses “ridged and razor-sharp” blades, which allow them to slice through thicker and more substantial foods. This, plus the addition of accessories like a shredder blade, allows a food processor to accomplish a number of tasks such as chopping and shredding.
Like Totally festival in Huntington Beach canceled by organizers

The '80s-themed Like Totally music festival set for Huntington State Beach on Saturday, May 11, has been canceled, organizers announced 24 hours before the show was set to begin.

The plug was pulled because organizers did not provide adequate safety documentation required for the main stage, according to California State Parks officials.

A post on the festival’s website, liketotallyfestival.com, Friday morning said the event, which included acts such as Public Image Ltd., ABC with Martin Fry and The Romantics on the bill for its fourth year, wasn’t happening on Saturday, but organizers were working on rescheduling.

“We are very saddened to announce the cancellation of the Like Totally music festival this Saturday, May 11th. We unfortunately have issues we cannot resolve to continue and for the safety and well-being of the bands and fans we have to make this decision. We apologize for the inconvenience. We are working on rescheduling the festival for a later date and tickets will be honored at that time.

“Thank you for being a fan!” the post reads.

Jeff David, lifeguard chief for Bolsa Chica and Huntington Beach state beaches, said operators could not provide the state fire code requirements, specifically a structural engineering report for the stage to prove it was sound and could hold a certain number of people.

“They elected to cancel the event,” said David, who said he wondered if the weather had something to do with the withdrawal.

However, ticket holders posted on social media that the event had been advertised as “rain or shine.”

David said the festival had sold about 6,000 tickets, a small-scale event when compared to some of the larger festivals held on the sand. It was the first time an event at Huntington State Beach had been canceled, David said.

Fans expressed disappointment and frustration in comments on the organizers’ Facebook post about the cancellation. Some had flown or driven in from other states for the festival.

Kelly McGraw was among the fans disappointed in the news. She has attended Like Totally since its first year, which was in Santa Ana. The Rancho Cucamonga resident described previous editions as “so much fun,” and said she didn’t have any issues with the festival in previous years.

“I was so looking forward to it. It was a great lineup,” she said.

McGrath and her husband usually drive out the night before and stay in a hotel that night and after the show to avoid the hour-long drive. But by the time the festival’s cancellation was announced, she wasn’t able to get a full refund from her hotel, the Waterfront by Hilton because that window for canceling had passed.

She had some concerns after a now-deleted post on the event’s Facebook page showed a different setup than previous years and she and other fans questioned the positioning of VIP and general admission areas.

After the cancellation, McGraw bought tickets to see former members of ‘80s band Oingo Boingo at the Canyon in Montclair on Saturday.

“I had to find a silver lining,” she said.

The festival’s cancellation comes two days after Like Totally headlining act The Bangles posted on social media that the band wouldn’t be performing due to “unforeseen circumstances.”

Other artists who had been on the lineup included The Smithereens featuring Marshall Crenshaw, The Tubes, Animation, Josie Cotton, Greg Kihn Band, Tommy Tutone, China Crisis and an All-Star Jam Featuring: The Reflexx & Flashback Heart Attack, Richard Page of Mr. Mister, Debora Iyall of Romeo Void, Martha Davis of The Motels, Dean Estus of Wham! and Jerry Miller of The Untouchables.

Scott Tucker, from festival promoter Sellout Productions, wrote in an email that organizers have talked to all of the bands and a number of them, including the Romantics, the Smithereens, the Tubes, the Greg Kihn Band, Tommy Tutone and Public Image, Ltd., agreed to a rescheduled date. He also said organizers were looking at dates and locations.

“Thanks for the support and sorry this happened but we will move on,” Tucker wrote.

No information had been posted about refunds as of early Friday afternoon.

“I hope they make it right for people,” McGraw said.

Promoters said they were working on rescheduling. David said the festival’s website, liketotallyfestival.com, Friday morning said the event had been canceled, organizers announced 24 hours before the show was set to begin.

Stepmom In Personal Essay

Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) opened up about her experience as a stepmom in a personal essay for Elle in honor of Mother’s Day.

The 2020 presidential hopeful became stepmother to her husband Doug Emhoff’s two children, Cole and Ella, when they married in 2014. In the essay, Harris explained that she and Emhoff “took it slow” when it came to introducing her to the kids.

“As a child of divorce, I knew how hard it could be when your parents start to date other people. And I was determined not to insert myself in their lives until Doug and I had established we were in this for the long haul,” she wrote. “Children need consistency; I didn’t want to insert myself into their lives as a temporary fixture because I didn’t want to disappoint them. There’s nothing worse than disappointing a child.”

When Harris did finally meet Emhoff’s children, she was nervous about making a good first impression, but she found they were incredibly welcoming.

Fast forward a few years, and she’s their “Momala,” a word Cole and Ella came up with after agreeing with Harris that they didn’t like the term “stepmom.” She said she developed a close relationship with their mother, Kerstin, as well.

“They are brilliant, talented, funny kids who have grown to be remarkable adults,” she noted. “I was already hooked on Doug, but I believed it was Cole and Ella who reeled me in.”

When Harris became a U.S. senator, Cole was off at college, and Ella was entering her senior year of high school. Splitting time between California and Washington, D.C., caused her to miss quite a few family events, including Ella’s swim meets and much to the senator’s dismay, her high school graduation.

“And it was Maggie Hassan, the senator from New Hampshire, who offered me some sage wisdom. ‘Our kids love us for who we are and the sacrifices we make,’ she said. ‘They get it.’

Though it can be difficult for all working parents to strike a good balance, Harris said she’s fortunate that, just as Hassan said, her stepchildren “get it.”

“They are my endless source of love and pure joy. I am so thankful to Doug, to Kerstin, and most of all, to Ella and Cole,” she wrote. “And as our family embarks together on this new journey ... I can say one thing with certainty, my heart wouldn’t be whole, nor my life full, without them.”

Fox announced that its hit drama "Empire" will end after Season 6 and that there are still no plans to bring back Jussie Smollett’s character.

The series recently aired the Season 5 finale after writing the embattled star out of the final episodes. Smollett was accused of faking a hate crime attack against himself in Chicago. He maintained his innocence and the 16 charges against him were ultimately dropped.

Speaking to reporters during a press call Monday, Fox Entertainment CEO Charlie Collier revealed that Season 6 will be the show’s last.

“We’re turning the final season of Empire into a huge television event. If you look at what we’re doing with Empire... we really are trying to go out guns-a-blazing,” Collier said via Entertainment Tonight. “One of the great benefits of announcing a final season is to allow the fans to lean in and have the ending they deserve, and that’s everything we’re trying to do with this iconic series. Six years is a pretty remarkable run for a drama series and we feel good about it.”

As Variety notes, Collier was asked if the news means Smollett’s character, Jamal, will return for a final farewell. He explained that there are no such plans, but that it’s possible.

“At this point, we have no plans for that,” Collier said. “The writer’s room for next season hasn’t even gathered yet.”

20th Century Fox TV previously told Fox News that there were no plans to include Smollett in Season 6 of “Empire” despite his contract being extended.

A spokesperson for Smollett told Fox News at the time: “We’ve told that Jussie will not be on ‘Empire’ in the beginning of the season but he appreciates they have extended his contract to keep Jamal’s future open. Most importantly he is grateful to Fox and ‘Empire’ leadership, cast, crew and fans for their unwavering support.”

“Empire” showrunner Brett Mahoney previously said that Season 6 will be a “reset” for the series and that he believes other characters will step up narratively to fill the void left behind by Jamal’s absence.

“Empire” will end after Season 6 will be the show’s last.

“Personally, I love not seeing the like count,” she told HuffPost. “It feels a bit weird to say, but I’ve stopped comparing myself to bigger accounts. I’ve also been more personal with the things I actually like versus what everyone else is liking. This feels like more what Instagram should be rather than an advertisement of ourselves on our page.”

Roberts is among the Canadian users testing a version of the platform that “hides” likes in order to emphasize the content itself. During Facebook’s F8 developer conference late last month, Instagram chief Adam Mosseri explained that, while followers will still be able to like and comment on your posts or videos, the outside world won’t be privy to the exact count of people who’ve liked a post.

This kinder, gentler version of Instagram is inspired by the app’s wildly successful Instagram Stories, which, like Snapchat, stay up for only 24 hours and don’t outwardly show who’s seen the post.

Given Instagram’s recent increased efforts to prioritize mental health — Instagram Stories were created in part to alleviate the pressure of receiving likes — the test makes a lot of sense. At F8, Mosseri said that this feature was set up in order to create a “less pressurized environment where people feel comfortable expressing themselves.” (Likes can also create a false sense of engagement, given the number of bots and services that exist to send fake likes to posts.)

Even better for Instagram’s bottom line — i.e. time spent on site — Canadians we spoke to said they’re posting more, without the built-up anxiety they used to feel about how the post would perform.

Cam, a 20-year-old on the east coast of Canada, said the test has totally changed the way he interacts with the app. Like many of us, he sees his feed as an extension of himself, so naturally, he gets a little bummed when something he posts doesn’t get many likes. He’s even deleted posts if they’re particularly low performing.

Activists yelled over her, making it difficult to hear the end of her address, even when she was amplified by speakers and a microphone.

"Shame," they yelled, over and over again.

"It could have been prevented, chief," yelled Sherlyn Haynes, Mitchell’s mother.

In response to ongoing calls for officers’ names to be released, Irving said they have been withheld because of credible threats — both the graffiti displayed in the city’s video and additional threats that she said were made over social media.

"Until all the evidence and facts are available, no disciplinary action, if any, will be taken against the officers," she said.

Incendiary comments prompt adjournment:

Following the trend of the previous three council meetings, activist Evan Regis Bunch’s incendiary comments — as he went over his allotted three minutes of public speaking — once again prompted council members to take a recess.

Bunch had demanded to know whether the District Attorney’s Office had an open investigation into Mitchell’s shooting.
